To whom it may concern,

I was in my second year of high school when I saw one of my friends going to Google's office to learn about technology courses. The company invited 200 Brazilian girls to meet the office and to introduce them to computer engineering. That was the first time I imagined how that kind of future was like and the advantages of choosing the computing area. After that, I started to search more about everything computer related and I fell for it, so I decided to give it a shot.

At college, I was afraid to start a new chapter in my life, that began with moving to a new city and with living by myself for the first time; but when I started my academic course and found out about HTML, CSS, Javascript, web design and how to build a website, I knew that there was where I belonged. After that, the other course subjects also showed me how Computer Science is such a broad and great area to be at, especially considering how it affects our daily lives.

Now, after five years, I find myself completely in love for the Computer Science and not being able to imagine myself taking any other direction in my life. And even though my passion was not instantaneous, I was and still am willing to work hard to learn all that is to know about this area.

Although I don't know what is my favorite computing area is yet, I do know that I love learning new things every day. I'm proud to see how I have grown into a responsible and hard-working person with every single step taken in my journey so far. Now, in this college period and with graduation arriving soon, I'm running out of time to accomplish everything I planned and wanted to do until the arrival of my degree. Considering that, I started a scientific initiation in order to present the project for a conference on women in technology, which has been one of my greatest achievements, in addition to delving into producing web and mobile design to improve in one of my favorite areas.

I hope to find new opportunities at Plank and, through that, to open doors to a brighter future and to all my dreams.

Yours sincerely,
